The Dragon Machine

As spirals of smoke billowed from its crescent nostrils, the dragon flew through the night sky,
Eager talons clawed and curled below,
An intricate fusion of twisting pipes threw a trail of blazing fire behind,
Along its spine, sharp and sheer spikes protruded and continued its ascent through the night sky,
Within the slopes and contours of its head, George steered and navigated,
The machine lumbered, stuttered and clambered through the night sky,
Piercing wings flapped, circled and soared, their span wide reaching and strong
Ticking, chugging and churning parts propelled the machine through the night sky,
An elongated, ancient thorn-like tail slithered and whipped behind,
Equipment rattled, swung and shook, hanging from the pipes,
Like an immeasurable army of eager warriors, the dragons followed,
Pressing on to their wilderness, through the night sky.
